The value of chemoprophylaxis with cephalosporin and penicillin was studied in the prevention of acute respiratory infections (ARI) in children with different respiratory diseases. Cephalosporin and penicillin were used in addition to routine therapy of respiratory diseases and antibiotic therapy were not administered routinely. ARI were diagnosed on the basis of clinical criteria and examination findings. Of 164 patients, who were included in the study, 114 had the severe ARI and 50 the mild ARI. The duration of observation was 7-15 days. In the group of children with severe ARI the incidence of ARI was 39% after chemoprophylaxis with penicillin, and 32% in the group with cephalosporin. The chemoprophylaxis with cephalosporin was more effective. Chemoprophylaxis with penicillin is no less effective than chemoprophylaxis with cephalosporin. Both types of chemoprophylaxis are effective in prevention of ARI in children with various respiratory diseases.Q: Explanation for the difference between spring.application.name and I was just reading this article and tried a spring app on my computer with the following code
